

Measuring outcomes

We're developing a new approach to analyse the impact of social services on the wellbeing of New Zealanders.

This can help funders, providers and others understand whether these services are making a genuine and lasting difference to people's lives, and inform better decisions about where to focus effort to improve people's wellbeing.

A new approach to measuring changes in people's wellbeing

We're developing a new approach to analyse the impact of social services on the wellbeing of New Zealanders. This can help funders, providers and others understand whether these services are...

Measuring the impacts of social housing

Our new working paper Measuring the wellbeing impacts of public policy: social housing - examines the impact of placement in social housing on peoples' wellbeing. The paper tests a novel...

Social Housing Test Case

We've completed our first social investment test case: social housing. We crunched the numbers on social housing to help understand what benefits there are for those living in a social...